The Senatorial Contest—The Fight Waxes Hotter.

New Men—Formidable Combinations—Chances.

Ex-President Johnson Still Ahead—His Friends Hopeful.

An Impartial and Sensible Article on the Contest.

FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

NASHVILLE, Saturday, October 10.—The Senatorial fight wages hotter every day, and men sit in the corners, like Jim C. Brown off the track and Laddie in the parlor, as I am advised to-day. Cooper, Senator of this country, has announced his withdrawal from the contest, and his brothers have long been among Andrew Johnson's best and staunchest friends. Milton Brown is, I learn, without strength, and as a second Shadwell will be hard to find.

Ex-President Johnson has now joined the Mass. House, contently after all his adherents. The ridge is eloquent but formal, steering clear of controversial topics, and when violent, our representatives from the country are said to be diverted to Etheridge, Meigs, Caldwell and Tipton, senders committed to no party. They would prefer a McNease, equal to the Senate, and especially anxious to claim a Senator as would be most lucrative, and for the Southern cause, too.

Theity is full of strangers and other hoods crowded. The people say that, in personal appearance in the manners and bearing of the members of the two Houses, the present General Assembly is greatly superior to its predecessor, and from the number of colored men who do not dress up to them, so many bills have been introduced reflecting acts of the past four years, that a jolly member sent a bill dealing all out, since it's a hundred. This is rather strong, but illustrative of the prevalent feeling of the new Houses. An East Tennesseean, a member of the House, says that Senator's would be the source of power, and that they will defeat both Johnson and Etheridge, and make T. A. G. their Senator. Nelson is a staunch friend of Andrew Johnson and will not be a candidate, nevertheless, it is asserted that he would be nominated. On the other hand, a Tennesseean insist that Johnson and the West Tennessee shall be represented.

There was a good deal of talk to-day by a friend of Johnson, contrasting Johnson's influence and worth of one of his rivals, he said that Johnson's huge skill were implied by his excavating machine, and the brains of the rival substituted for the original remains of this mammoth cave, and it devolved upon him to see the bill off. Etheridge's soul and earnestness, and the devotion of his friends, would be held throughout the continent.

The light grows very interesting, and to an outsider, who gives it but little attention, it becomes, in view of the importance of the issue, more and more important. To-morrow, he may be surprised to find that the ratifying, though scattered throughout the continent, would be the source of many of the curiosities, but this is now far gone.
